John 9:1-41

Have you heard of the sinfulness quotient? In what areas of our lives do we suffer the most, depending upon the sins that either we or our parents may have committed? While we cannot blame God, many times our choices impact us.

With all the sin and suffering in the twenty-first century, what entire groups of people have possibly suffered the most at the hands of corrupt leaders?

1 Samuel 16:1-13

In this account God has chosen a king—a most unlikely king—among the brothers in the family of Jesse. God sends Samuel to search for the imperfect one, who turns out to be the one God perfects for God's divine purpose.

How does God use us as imperfect human beings? How does God make us perfect for God's purpose? Why do you suppose God works in this manner?

Psalm 23

These six short verses, comprising Psalm 23, are some of the best known lines in all of Scripture. These verses have offered hope and promise to God's people for many, many centuries.

How can you re-embrace the message of Psalm 23 anew in the midst of Lent? How can you receive God's message of restoration with a glad heart?

Ephesians 5:8-14

Once again we see the powerful contrast between light and darkness. In this passage the writer holds good and evil in tension through the metaphor of light and darkness. Do these differences become more clear?

How can we more completely understand the moral and ethical differences between right and wrong when viewed through the lens of this metaphor?
